

CONTENTS

Foreword, by Jessica T. Mathews xi

Acknowledgments xv

Prologue 3

Chapter 1. The Kremlin's Power Play 7

Yeltsin on the wane. The Primakov formula. Who runs Russia?

The Kremlin seeks an heir. The Bank of New York scandal. Enter

Putin. Russia wants order. The uses of war.

Chapter 2. The End of the Yeltsin Era 44

The parliamentary elections of 1999. The difficult fate of Russian liberals. The Communist Party as a still powerful element. Yeltsin amazes everyone and departs. What Yeltsin leaves to his heir.

Chapter 3. Putin, the New Russian Leader 69

Presidential elections without a choice. What course to take? The new Kremlin spider web. Formation of the government. Taming of the governors. Whom to rely upon. The intelligentsia is concerned.

Chapter 4. The Moment of Truth 104

Putin repeals the taboo on persecution of the oligarchs. The victor in the boring wilderness. A harsh August and a feeling of suffocation.

Reinforcing the superpresidential regime. Military reform.

Chapter 5. Power in One Fist	134
Chechnya as a trap. The government under the gun. The Soviet anthem. Putin enters the world. Why does the president want power?
Chapter 6. Russia Tranquilized	163
Back to the kitchen. Society seeks calm. Russian Gaullism. Who loves Russia more? Pogrom at NTV. Wax dummies.
Chapter 7. The Long-Awaited Breakthrough	187
Putin renews market reforms. Fighting bulldogs under the carpet. Moscow and Washington work it out. The Russian president chooses the West. Disturbing signs.
Chapter 8. The Kremlin's Ambiguity	221
The nature of stability. The grudges continue. New address to the nation as the reflection of the Kremlin's disorientation. Putin moves to the West, leaving the elites behind. Yeltsin is dissatisfied with his heir. New uncertainties. Chechnya again reminds Moscow about itself. The traditional Russian choice: Freedom or order?
Chapter 9. Russia Goes Through New Elections	259
Putin considers his course. Why does Russia choose "old Europe" and disappoint America? The Kremlin's "anti-oligarch revolution." The December Duma elections—certain results in uncertain circumstances. The optimism of youth.
Chapter 10. Russia Has a New President—Again Putin	294
How to win an election by ignoring it. Firing the unsinkable Kasyanov. The liberals are paralyzed. Putin gets his new legitimacy, which again looks vulnerable. Moscow ponders its relations with the West. Russia and the European Union: dating without hope of marriage.

Chapter 11. From Oligarchic Authoritarianism to Bureaucratic Authoritarianism 322

Putinism as a continuation and rejection of Yeltsinism. The economics of growth without development. The social sphere: Degradation continues. Russia and the West in search of selective partnership. Did the president have an alternative? The dangers of oversimplification. An evaluation of political leadership.

Chapter 12. New Agenda and New Disappointments 352

Russia wants democracy. The social Darwinism of power. Khodorkovsky repents. Liberalism versus neoconservatism. Chechnya: the ritual murder of Kadyrov. Are there parties left in Russia? Putin's economic challenge. The banking crisis. Russian foreign policy: trial by "new realism." The Beslan tragedy and its aftermath.

Chapter 13. Russia's Unfinished Story 396

The West—means and goal. The Faustian bargain. Will Russia be able to reject the Russian System? Russia's hope.

Notes 409

Index

About the Author

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace